When the Temperature Rises – It’s “TOO HOT FOR SPOT”

ARL Saddened by Heat-Related Death of Dog Near Jamaica Pond

The Animal Rescue League of Boston (ARL) was saddened to hear about the senseless death of the dog that was found left in a hot car this evening near Jamaica Pond. As the investigation into this horrific incident continues, ARL again wants to remind the public that temperatures inside a vehicle can soar to well over 100 degrees in a matter of minutes when outside temperatures are just 70 degrees.

A hot car is NOT a safe environment for an animal, as tragically seen in tonight’s incident.

“A hot vehicle is very dangerous for animals,” said Lt. Alan Borgal, ARL Law Enforcement Lead Investigator. “Animals overheat easily, and can quickly succumb to heat-stroke if left in a hot vehicle. The best advice is to either leave your animals at home when it’s hot outside.”

With the passage of S. 2369 in November, 2016, it is now illegal in Massachusetts to confine any animal in a vehicle when extreme heat or cold could be dangerous to the health and well-being of the animal. The law also allows Animal Control Officers, law enforcement officer and firefighters the legal right to enter a vehicle to retrieve an animal in danger. Regular citizens can also act to save an animal in danger, however only after making a reasonable effort to locate the owner, and contacting first responders. Pet owners can be cited up to $500 and face possible forfeiture of the animal.

ARL does not want this animal’s death to be in vain. Because ARL is not directly involved in this investigation, we will not be able to comment on the specifics of this case, however we are at your disposal to delve into the dangers of leaving animals in hot cars, and the legal ramifications of doing so.
