June is National Adopt a Shelter Cat Month, and the Animal Rescue League of Boston (ARL) would particularly like to find a forever home for one amazing cat with a number of health concerns.

Rhade, a 10-year-old domestic shorthair, came to ARL when her previous owner was moving and presented with quite a few common and uncommon conditions.

Rhade’s most noticeable issue is neurological, as she was born with the congenital abnormality called cerebellar hypoplasia. The condition affects her coordination and balance.

She also tested positive for Feline Immunodeficiency Virus (FIV), which was likely contracted via a bite from another infected cat. An offshoot of Rhade’s FIV was swelling to her lip, commonly known as a rodent ulcer. A biopsy did not reveal any underlying issues, but her lip is permanently deformed.

Finally, Rhade has developed Horner’s syndrome in her right eye. This condition is due to an unknown impairment to her sympathetic nervous system – which is responsible for the normal fight or flight reaction.

Despite all these issues, Rhade has persevered and does have a good quality of life. Rhade has responded well to all her treatments at ARL, however it’s hard to know what her medical future holds, and whoever adopts her will have to monitor her closely and regular veterinary care will be vital.
As with any animal that comes through our doors, ARL’s veterinary medicine staff have spent an enormous amount of time diagnosing and treating all of Rhade’s health issues to ensure that any potential adopter will be as informed as possible before taking this sweet girl home.

Rhade is available for video/still photography and ARL staff are available to answer any questions about Rhade, her medical concerns, or shelter medicine in general
